The Winds of Change at Laurel Legal Services

by George C. Miller, Jr., Esq.

Since 1967, Laurel Legal Services has been at the forefront of the legal profession in our community. Occupying its premises on South Pennsylvania Avenue in Greensburg, it has provided civil representation for those in need throughout Westmoreland, Indiana, Armstrong, Clarion, Cambria and Jefferson Counties. While its mission to assist the disadvantaged has not and will not change, it has recently seen some very exciting changes come its way.

One of those exciting changes comes by way of Matt Schimizzi, the newly re-elected president of Laurel Legal's board.

For those who do not know him, Matt is a 2009 graduate of the Duquesne University School of Law. Following graduation, Matt came back to his hometown to join his father, Rich, in practice. He served as an assistant public defender from 2010 to 2013, and in 2012 he accepted an appointment to Laurel's board.

Matt’s background and various pursuits are an unmistakable hallmark of one who understands the societal imperative to, as Matt puts it, “help those who are less fortunate,” who “can’t help themselves.” For lawyers, Matt believes this takes the form of pro bono, reduced fee, and of course, the work of community-based legal service organizations, including Laurel Legal Services.

The Board recently elected Matt to his second term as President, but his beliefs and efforts in bringing the organization into the twenty-first century span the entirety of his membership. Despite his position, Matt is quick to emphasize that he is but one of a fluctuating group, presently hovering at nineteen members, and that all decisions are made by majority vote. That is an important acknowledgment, because there are some significant structural changes coming to Laurel Legal in 2018.

This past year, the Board, with the assistance of an outside consultant, undertook strategic planning efforts. This planning initiative resulted in recommendations to the Board for the consolidation and utilization of resources, including attorneys, staff, and office space. Ultimately, the Board voted to close two offices—Indiana and Armstrong counties—but the impact of these closures will be minimized by the leasing of smaller, satellite office space, ensuring the continued availability of localized services.

Westmoreland County will remain the headquarters for Laurel Legal, but in a new location, at 16 East Ottermann Street in Greensburg. Keeping with the theme of consolidation, Laurel Legal's attorneys will specialize in two or three areas of practice each. Likewise, the client intake process at Laurel Legal will be done through a centralized telephone number (including a toll-free number), ideally to a centralized intake staff.

Some may see these changes as restricting access to certain highly utilized services in certain counties. While that remains to be seen, it is worth noting that these decisions were made by unanimous vote of the Board, including the non-attorney, income-eligible members.

Matt, no stranger to running a business, describes these initiatives as treating Laurel Legal “more as a law firm than a series of local offices.” Matt adds that the ideas of streamlining continued on page 18
This is my last message as President of the Westmoreland Bar Association. I ask each and every one of you to keep your clapping down to the minimum so as not to disturb the courts, the staff, or the clients who may be in your office.

I, along with the rest of the board, have done our best to tackle any and all issues that came forward during the year. I am confident that every board member during my service did what they believed was best for the Association. As with almost any endeavor, there are bumps along the way. The important thing to remember is that the Westmoreland Bar Association has a long history of service to the community and to its members. Regardless of any issues that may have arisen this year, or in the past, or that will arise in the future, I believe our history of service will continue, and even more importantly, is needed by our members and by the communities which we serve.

During this past year, the association needed to engage in significant updates and repairs to our building which included air conditioning replacement, roof issues, pointing, and a few other fixups. The board and the Building Committee have been working together in exploring various ideas and possibilities regarding the home of the Westmoreland Bar Association. We replaced some equipment that broke down after many years of use, and we engaged a number of experts to assist and advise on numerous issues that came up throughout the year.

As a change, I asked the Bench/Bar Committee to look into having our annual conference in Pittsburgh. The Fairmont Hotel played host to our summer Bench/Bar Conference. The views from all of the guest rooms were amazing, the food was outstanding, the CLEs that involved instruction from people at a local distillery and an expert on medical marijuana went over well based upon my conversations with attendees. Who would have thought that lawyers would have enjoyed learning about alcohol and drugs? I also wanted to take a moment to thank QuattriniRafferty for hosting the after-dinner cocktail hour at their offices in Pittsburgh.

For those who did not attend, the Holiday Dinner Dance was brought back to Westmoreland County: the host was Westmoreland Country Club for the first time in many years. The event was a large success thanks to everybody’s efforts.

As usual, the Planning Committee had a good retreat and produced some excellent suggestions for consideration by the Board. The Board has already taken some of those suggestions and adopted them, and is in the process of reviewing numerous suggestions regarding some changes to our bylaws to be presented in the future.

A number of our members participated in what was termed as focus groups: an attempt to take members from various age groups and have them provide suggestions to the Board and the Association of things that could be modified, changed, or remain the same, that benefits each group and our membership as a whole. Their suggestions have already resulted in some changes including the Thursday (or almost-Thursday) social events that are scheduled throughout the county where members can get together and socialize.

In conclusion—and I did ask you all to stop clapping and cheering so loudly—it has been an honor to serve as President of the Westmoreland Bar Association. I am grateful to the membership for entrusting me with this important task. My firm belief is that this association is here to serve our members and our community. This has been my goal and I have concentrated my efforts in that regard. I have done the best job that I could do to achieve those goals. I am hopeful that the members will continue to actively participate in committees, activities, mentoring, and as officers of the Board of Directors so that our association can continue to be relevant and vibrant. I have now been a member of this association for nearly 30 years. In that time, I have come to the conclusion that Westmoreland County is one of the best if not THE best place to practice law.

I would be remiss if I did not thank all my fellow board members for their service and invaluable help throughout my tenure as president. I would also like to thank our staff, including Diane Krivoniak, Susan Zellner, Jessica

New Podcast Goes Below the Bar

The Westmoreland Bar Association is pleased to announce the launch of a new podcast about the members of the bar. It’s called Below the Bar, and is hosted by WBA member Adam Gorzelsky, an associate with Williams Law Offices in Greensburg. It is intended to be of interest to judges, lawyers, clerks, officers, and others who work in and around the court system. Adam has already interviewed Tim Andrews, John Scales, Dick Galloway, Leo Ciaramitaro, Vince Quatrini, and others.

You can listen to any of these podcasts on the web at westbar.org/below-the-bar or subscribe through iTunes.

How often will you have new episodes?
My initial goal was one podcast per week; however, scheduling conflicts are an unfortunate reality of life. The simplest answer is that I am committed to telling as many stories as possible for as long as people are still willing to talk and listen.

What is the most surprising thing you have learned so far?
When I began the podcast, I expected a lot more negativity from the attorneys. After all, the disgruntled lawyer is a popular theme. I have been surprised at the sheer level of positivity that I have encountered regarding the profession. Perhaps this simply is because attorneys with a negative opinion of the profession have no interest in appearing on a legal podcast. Subpoenas may be necessary to prove a point.

How do you choose your subjects?
I naturally had a list on my mind of some of the more—let’s just say “seasoned”—attorneys with whom I wanted to speak. Nevertheless, I am happy to sit down with anyone who is willing to talk. Everyone has an important story to be told.

Why did you start the podcast?
As a (relatively) young lawyer, I have been fascinated to learn the diverse backgrounds of so many of my fellow attorneys. While this may be true of some other professions, it began to occur to me that the legal profession is quite unique because entry into the profession can be approached from so many different angles. That was my initial idea for the podcast—to learn what made my colleagues the attorneys, and more importantly, the people that they are today.

What is this podcast about?
At its core, the podcast is about the legal profession. We discuss aspects of the law, discuss changes in the legal landscape, give advice to aspiring attorneys, etc. However, the legal profession is about people. As such, this podcast is a fascinating look into the type of people who engage in this line of work.

Is “Below the Bar” just for lawyers?
Absolutely not. I believe that this podcast is an excellent opportunity for the public at large to truly get to know the people that may be hired at the most critical juncture of someone’s life. Internet searches or a picture on a billboard don’t come close to providing the character depth necessary to make such an important decision. I truly hope that the public utilizes this podcast as a tool to get to know some of the fantastic attorneys that this county has to offer.

Likewise, this podcast also is geared towards students or other aspiring jurists. Giving the increasingly burdensome cost of higher education, it absolutely is imperative for students to acquire as much knowledge about the actual practice of law before deciding to take the plunge. Some of the advice that has been accumulated thus far on this podcast is invaluable.
Editor’s note: On December 19, 2017, Richard H. Galloway received the prestigious “Neddie” award from the Westmoreland County chapter of the American Inn of Court. Named for the chapter’s founder, Ned J. Nakles, the award is presented, when appropriate, to the lawyer who most enhances the image of lawyers in the community and brings joy and pride to the profession. Its inscription: “For generously sharing your sense of humor, legal analysis, wise counsel, and a glass of wine.”

Milt Munk Is Moving On

by Diane Krivonak, Executive Director

There are very few attorneys who can claim to have shaped the WBA as significantly as Milt Munk. His service to the WBA began in 1988 when long-time bar association treasurer David Cook retired. Appointed by the WBA board of directors that included Ken Burkley, Reg Belden, Vince Quatrini, Dick Galloway, Jack Bergstein, Jim Kelley, and Rich Schimizzi, Milt began his tenure as Treasurer on January 20, 1988. Milt served as WBA treasurer until 2010, and in that time period the bar foundation board of trustees also appointed him to be their treasurer (1991–2010).

During his 22-year tenure as WBA treasurer, Milt is credited with helping to purchase and renovate the current bar headquarters (1990) which included furnishing all the offices and meeting rooms (1991) and designing the upstairs kitchen (1994). He is even credited with designing the outside garbage platform (1992). As the bar foundation treasurer, Milt was instrumental in writing the IOLTA and Laurel Legal Services grants that accounted for $60,000 annually to operate the Pro Bono program.

In 2003, he received the bar association’s most prestigious President’s Award for Professionalism, and in 2005, he was recognized by the state bar association with the Goffman Award for his leadership role in providing Pro Bono Services to the indigent in Westmoreland County. His involvement in PBA includes his service as WBA representative on the House of Delegates for the past 22 years and on the PBF board of trustees for the past 10 years.

I visited Milt in January to interview him ahead of his April retirement. After 59 years of private practice in the same location on the Diamond in downtown Mount Pleasant, Milt is closing his office, relinquishing his law license, and moving on. My first question to him should have been: “What’s the hurry?”

What Made You Want to Serve as Treasurer of the WBA?

I had always been interested in bar activities. Everything I got involved with prior to this was because I had an interest in finances. I was treasurer of the country club, and treasurer of my investment club, and I helped the council in Mount Pleasant with their budgets. In 1988 I was not involved in anything else with the bar so I thought I might as well help out with their finances.

Have I Missed Any Other Major Contributions That You Have Made to the WBA or WBF?

While renovating the WBA building I worked closely with the architect to obtain waivers for some ADA issues. I even traveled to Harrisburg with the architect for a hearing to allow us to waive the installation of a sprinkler system.

I was also involved with the bar association investments from the beginning when we started with $70,000. The balance is now almost $1.8 million.

How Do You Remember Your Years as Treasurer?

The first big thing I remember when I was Treasurer was a meeting we (WBA board and Building Chair David DeRose) had to determine if the bar members wanted a building. The vote was at the annual meeting in April of about 1990 and that was one meeting I even dressed up for because I was making the presentation. The membership voted, and it passed by just five votes so it was not an overwhelming majority. After that everything fell into place. At one point we even held a phone-a-thon where we raised $400,000 without any problem. There were a lot of things involved in renovating the building that could not happen today. For one, they allowed me to make a lot of decisions that would not be allowed today.

YOU HAVE BEEN A LAWYER FOR 59 YEARS. WAS THERE ANYTHING ELSE YOU WANTED TO DO?

No. When I decided to go to school, I decided that I wanted to be a lawyer. My parents did not try to sway me in any direction. I started Notre Dame in 1953 when tuition was $1,350. After I started there, I discovered that the school offered a six-year program to earn a law degree. The requirement was that you had to decide to become a lawyer after your second year, and when you were a junior you took one law school course. In your senior year, all your classes were part of the law school curriculum. You committed yourself to be a lawyer. Otherwise all you had was an arts and letter degree.

HOW DID YOU CHOOSE NOTRE DAME?

Notre Dame was a big school for the mining towns around this area because kids in this area didn’t typically go to college. These mining communities were ethnic and mostly all Catholic. They were Polish, Slovak, or Irish. (The Munk name is Slovak.) The nuns at the schools all pushed Notre Dame because it was Catholic, plus the 1947 Heisman Trophy winner Johnny Lujack was from Connellsville and went to Notre Dame. That got a lot of people from our area to rally behind Notre Dame.

YOU WERE SUCH A MAJOR PART OF THE PURCHASE AND RENOVATION OF THE BAR BUILDING. HOW DO YOU FEEL ABOUT KEEPING THE BUILDING?

The bar association does need to keep a presence. Our building may be bigger than we need at the present time, but if we went someplace else it would be very expensive. We still need a place for meetings, and seminars and for people to gather. Maybe not so much room for depositions and such because there is not so much of a need for that anymore, but we definitely do need a presence.

WHERE DO YOU SEE THE PRACTICE OF LAW GOING IN THE NEXT 20 YEARS?

I feel that I am getting out at the right time due to computerization. It is changing everything about the practice of law. One thing is the cost and the other is that computerization is forcing people to operate 24 hours a day. I have email, but my secretary handles that and if I need to talk with someone I just call them. I still don’t have a cell phone and everybody knows that. People ask me who to recommend them to now that I am retiring and I say that I can’t refer them to anyone because they won’t be happy. I just do things differently.

For instance, a lot of times when people come in here I don’t charge them. Young lawyers just starting out can’t afford to do that because they have to pay their bills. When I started my practice, real estate was the way to get in the business. Now there is no real estate work.

WHAT ARE YOU MOST LOOKING FORWARD TO DOING OR SEEING IN YOUR RETIREMENT?

Playing golf and getting involved in some different activities although I don’t know what they may be yet.

DO YOU SEE BAR ASSOCIATIONS HAVING RELEVANCE FOR THIS NEXT GENERATION OF NEW LAWYERS?

Attorneys do need a central location such as the bar association where they can go to meet other attorneys and ask questions or to get help with practical advice, but if you don’t have a bar association where someone can go talk to then these young lawyers are out on their own.

If you go back to the 1960s, 70s, and 80s, you could go to the recorder’s office and there were a half-dozen attorneys there. You could go right up to them with your questions and they would answer you right on the spot. You don’t have that today.

ANY ADVICE FOR NEW LAWYERS?

Your word has to be your word and you have to live up to your promises.

IN CLOSING

Milt’s final remarks to me were, “It’s an entirely different world out there.” It sure is, Milt. We wish you the best as you move on from the practice of law and we thank you for the care and leadership that you have given this bar association. Keep in touch—and let us know your cell phone number, when you finally get one.
Westmoreland County attorneys have long volunteered their time and efforts to assist those who are in need of legal services, but may not be able to afford a lawyer. There are many avenues through which this has and currently occurs, including providing services via court appointments, through the Westmoreland Lawyer Referral Service, and through Westmoreland County’s Pro Bono office. The courts are ever appreciative of such services. Many of you know that Westmoreland County’s Laurel Legal Services, Inc., has recently scaled back in its representation of petitioners for Protection from Abuse actions.

Since that time, efforts have been made to make our local Bar aware of the decreased resources available with regard to representation in Protection from Abuse matters. The Bench is deeply grateful to those who have already expressed a commitment to covering one day of service to assist those who are in need of services in conjunction with a PFA. We also wanted to encourage those who may not be aware of the need for services to consider donating a day of your time to representing a litigant in a Protection from Abuse matter. The Pro Bono office will coordinate all representation. A day of representation consists of handling cases on that day alone (a Tuesday); not on any subsequent days should the case be scheduled for another day of proceedings. An interested attorney may choose any Tuesday that would fit his or her schedule.

If you are interested in helping, please contact Amanda Stein at the Pro Bono office at 724-837-5539.

Thanks again to our local Bar for your service to our community.

Sincerely,

Board of Judges

PARIS, FRANCE
To-Wit: My Life As A Gigabyte

by S. Sponte, Esq.

I am in a bit of a depression. I know what you’re thinking, here we go again, right, but, really, this one is different. This is not like the one in which I walk into the office first thing in the morning and rip up the office plants by their roots, and this is not like the one in which I throw all of my fingernail clippings into my secretary’s precious goldfish bowl with vulgar glee. No, this one is really quite different.

I am recently returned from my bar association’s annual bench-bar conference, and therein lies this latest installment of angst. The conference is a wonderful event, an occasion when many of us retreat for the weekend to some nearby resort to attend seminars, to play golf, and to drink in public. It’s the one time of the year we can let down our hair in the presence of our colleagues without fear of being scalped. I always spend the weekend trying to feign as much sincerity and camaraderie as possible towards my colleagues; it helps to get them to cooperate on cases if they think I like them.

The physical presence of all those files is something of a comfort to me. They stand as a corporeal testimony to my career.

Now normally I come away from the conference feeling refreshed and invigorated by such deception. Not this year, though, as I have been in a funk ever since I returned home. It started the afternoon of the second day, right after the golf tournament. My foursome had won the trophy for the most inventive score card, and even though our victory had been appealed to the Bar Association’s Ad Hoc Golf Tournament Honesty Review Board, I was nonetheless feeling particularly mellow and content. After a quick shower and a beer chaser, I found myself strolling along the row of display booths set up by the sundry vendors of law-related services and commodities. The usual purveyors were there, offering the latest in legal research, banking and title insurance services, police and ambulance scanners and the like. This year, however, my attention was drawn to a company that described itself as a specialist in document management. Since I was unfamiliar with the service, I stopped to ask a few questions.

The gentleman in charge was delighted to see me; since he wasn’t passing out any free samples of candy, ballpoint pens, tote bags, or keychains, no other lawyers had stopped. His company specialized in computer storage of files, and he told me he could store all of my closed files on disk, thereby eliminating the need for me to retain both the old files themselves and the office space required to store them.

When I told him I had about 4,000 closed files, he held up what looked like a small computer hard drive with USB cable attached, and allowed as how all 4,000 of them could be stored on less than one, count ’em, less than one of those devices. At first, I was taken aback. Then I took affront.

“Just one,” I said. “You mean all my files, my entire career, can fit on this two-inch square device? That it, just one?”

“Well, they do hold 500 gigabytes of information,” he said, as if he thought that somehow would offer solace.

Now it’s true my closed files take up a lot of office space that could probably be put to better use, and it’s also true that I have for some time been considering some type of file storage arrangement. But I have often taken such great pleasure from wandering into my file room and gazing at that semi-vast expanse of metal cabinets and paper folders. I stand there amidst the divorces, the wrongful deaths, the custody wars, the will contests, the malpractice suits, the huffings and puffings, the traverses and travails of the people who have passed through my practice, and I reflect on what and where I’ve been as a lawyer. The physical presence of all those files is something of a comfort to me. They stand as corporeal testimony to my career, and when it comes to their final resting place, storage by gigabyte had simply not occurred to me. I’d been thinking more along the lines of a mosque.

When I first started my career, I wanted to change the course of mighty rivers and bend steel in my bare hands. I know now that I am not going to leave behind the kind of legacy I first dreamed of when I started law school. However, I do like to think that I’ve brought some measure of esprit to my practice and that I’ve imbued my clients and their causes with a fair degree of energy and passion. That may be my only legacy, and my files may be its only physical remnant. However, it now appears that, by the wave of some techno-magic wand, my entire career can be stripped bare-wire clean of emotion and converted into a pedestrian string of 0’s and 1’s, and not a very long string at that.

So after having given the matter due consideration, I have decided not to digitize. I simply could not bear to see my entire career reduced to a storage device that can be carried around in someone’s coat pocket. I need for my files to take three strong men three full days to cart out of my office after I’m gone. I’ve been a good lawyer now for almost fifty years and I will not settle for less. How else will anyone know I’ve been here?

Notwithstanding the herculean effort of toil, treasure, and engineering which went into it, the Pennsylvania Canal—often called the “Main Line” or “Grand Canal”—which ran from Philadelphia to Pittsburgh, once considered one of the marvels of the age, would, after its official opening in 1834, drift, in a matter of decades, into obsolescence, obscurity, and finally, out of the collective memory of the public.

Without our major rivers, our county—and for that matter southwestern Pennsylvania—would have been just another Appalachian backwater. About 40 percent of Westmoreland’s boundary lines are riparian in nature, the most recognized being the Monongahela River, which separates Rostraver Township, Monessen and North Belle Vernon from Washington County; and the Allegheny River, which separates New Kensington, Arnold, Lower Burrell, and Allegheny Township from the counties of Allegheny and Butler.

Often overlooked is the entire northern boundary, which covers a distance of approximately sixty miles. In the east, it stops just six miles short of Johnstown: a boundary defined by the Kiskiminetas and Conemaugh rivers. Here, the rivers separate the townships of Allegheny, Bell, Loyalhanna, Derry, Fairfield, and Saint Clair, as well as municipalities such as West Leechburg, Vandergrift, Bolivar, New Florence, and Seward from the counties of Armstrong and Indiana.

The canal “boom” of the early nineteenth century got underway in 1817, when New York state began, in earnest, its construction of the Erie Canal; an undertaking unprecedented in its scope and expense. Pennsylvania legislators took note that the “Big Ditch,” initiated by New York Historic canals of Pennsylvania, including divisions of the 19th-century Pennsylvania Canal system plus navigable rivers, other canals, and four railroads that made the system more useful. Not all of the canals shown on the map existed at the same time.

Governor DeWitt Clinton, was no longer a laughing matter, and that commercially the commonwealth might be in danger of being left behind. The Erie Canal was demonstrating on its few operating sections, that cargo, heavier and more cumbersome than wagons could accommodate, could be economically shipped by water.

Ten years later, Pennsylvania was still planning its own cross-state canal between Philadelphia and Pittsburgh, a distance of 395 miles. In 1827, the legislature authorized a 44-mile extension of the proposed Pennsylvania Canal’s Western Division (Pittsburgh to Johnstown), beginning at the mouth of the Kiskiminetas, running upstream, and into the Conemaugh as far Blairsville. The following year, a further extension was approved along the Conemaugh to Johnstown.

ENGINEERING MARVELS

In the absence of level ground, canals require the installation of locks to compensate for changes in elevation. These fixed chambers, with gates at both ends, through which water levels may be changed to raise or lower boats, were first conceived by the Chinese in the tenth century, but a fifteenth century design by Leonardo da Vinci became the accepted standard in Europe and the United States and is still used today. A Canal Commission report from 1830 shows 64 locks between Pittsburgh and Johnstown, with lifts ranging from 5 to 12.7 feet. The report shows the installation of one or more locks on Westmoreland’s northern riparian boundary adjacent to Tarentum, Brackenridge, Freeport, Lecichburg, Apollo, Roaring Run, Saltsburg, the Conemaugh tunnel, Blairsville, Lockport, Centerville (now Huff), Abnerville, Rodger’s Mill, Nineveh, and Laurel Hill—with a terminus at the Canal Basin at Johnstown.

The sheer magnitude of the project is stunning. Including the various branches off the Main Line, Pennsylvania’s canal system covered 1,243 miles of channel, 40 feet wide at the waterline, 28 feet wide at the bottom, with a minimum depth of 4 feet—dug by man and beast. Here, on the Western Division alone, in addition to the locks, 16 aqueducts were constructed, along with 10 dams, 64 culverts, 39 waste weirs, and 152 road bridges passing over the channel. To avoid a long circuitous loop in the Conemaugh River, a 412-foot aqueduct carried the canal over the river and into a tunnel—only the third constructed in the United States—which was 817 feet long.

ALL ABOARD

By the fall of 1830, the Western Division had come to life with the initiation of freight traffic, and the following May a freight boat, the first of its kind, arrived in Pittsburgh from Johnstown containing 7,927 pounds of merchandise. The initial flatboats, often referred to as Durham boats, were of varied sizes, up to 60-feet long, with a capability of hauling up to 16 tons of cargo (in later years the Erie Canal would accommodate boats as long as 90 feet and weighing 100 tons including cargo). Some were “containerized” vessels which facilitated the loading and unloading of merchandise in large wooden boxes of uniform size.

The boats, with crews of two to six men, excluding the captain, were pulled by teams of two to three mules or horses, subject to a state-imposed speed limit of four miles per hour—a little faster than the three-mile-per-hour pace of soldiers on the march—to prevent a wake from undercutting the canal’s earthen embankments. Teams were rested by changing them every 15 to 20 miles with animals housed along the route, though some boats carried their own relief team on board. Tolls were determined by weight, distance, and the nature of the material or merchandise hauled, and the cost of shipping was generally about a tenth of the cost of overland transport. With lanterns, boats could also travel by night, but a major flaw in the system was that the channels were subject to freezing, preventing their use at times during the winter months.

While transporting freight was the canal’s principal purpose, it was the packet boats, which carried passengers, that generated excitement. Of course, there had been passengers on the freighters, often westward immigrants who glided along the canal accompanied by their household possessions, but the packet boats were meant to be the inland luxury liners of their day.

In 1832, a reporter for the Harrisburg Reporter wrote of his experience on the canal’s Western Division, aboard a boat built by David Leech of Armstrong County:

“These boats are constructed according to the most approved plan of those used on the New York and Erie Canal. The largest are 79 feet long, and will carry 25 passengers and 30 tons of freight, drawn by two horses. The apartments are these: A ladies’ cabin in the bow of the boat, calculated for eight persons. This cabin is handsomely decorated, and has tables, chairs and beds for that number of persons, and is neat and comfortable as such rooms usually are in steam boats. The next room is what is called the ‘midships,’ containing the freight. Next is the gentlemen’s room, large enough for all passengers; this room besides a bar with the choicest liquors, is calculated for a table, at which all the passengers breakfast, dine and sup, and contains beds and bunks for all the male passengers. The last room is the kitchen, at the steerage, where cooking is done in superior style.”

Mr. Leech’s boat was obviously the top of the line; for many guests in other boats described confinement in crowded close quarters, with narrow, unpadded bunks attached three high to the walls, with some passengers sleeping on the floor; and changing into night clothes was so impractical that people slept fully dressed.

Charles Dickens, who was a passenger in 1842, provided a hint as to how basic the amenities were:

“The washing accommodations were primitive. There was a tin ladle chained to the deck, with which every gentleman who thought it necessary to cleanse himself (many were superior to this weakness) fished the dirty water out of the canal, and poured it into a tin basin, secured in a like manner. There was also a jack-towel. And hanging up before a little looking glass in the bar...were a public comb and hairbrush.”

Yet, despite these inconveniences, including the need to agilely duck several times an hour when the cry of “low bridge” came from the helmsman, the canal became a tourist attraction. Many travelers, domestic and foreign, preferred the Pennsylvania Main Line.
over the Erie Canal for the experience of riding over the mountain, and seeing the spectacular views offered by the Allegheny Portage Railroad,\(^2\) which for those traveling east began at Johnstown.

CONQUERING THE MOUNTAINS

The Allegheny mountains had always been a speed bump to western development, and the mountains posed the main obstacle to a cross-state canal. The project was already underway notwithstanding the fact that there had been no resolution of the problem of how to deal with this barrier, which rose 1,400 feet above the proposed canal, and 2,397 feet above sea level.

An initial proposal to construct a four-mile tunnel through the mountain, which even today would present a major challenge, was rejected in favor of a complicated portage railway system.

It was not a conventional railroad with steam locomotives pulling cars along rails—a system that was still in its developmental phase at the time—rather it was a funicular railway, which we would call a cable car or incline, similar to that which operates on Mount Washington on Pittsburgh’s south side.

The power source, a 35-horsepower steam engine atop Cresson Mountain, moved cables made of hemp which ran down the center of the parallel tracks, and were hooked to two railway trains of two- or three-boat-carrying flatcars, one going up the incline, the other going down, with each serving as a counterweight to the other. The train going up regulated the speed of the down train, as the down train pulled the up train to the top; a motor and brake system in the engine house compensated for any disparity in weight between the two trains.

On both sides of the mountain, railway tracks went into the water of the canal allowing for the submersion of the railway cars so that the boats could float onto and off the cars, just as recreational boats are today are loaded onto and off of trailers pulled by motor vehicles.

There were ten of these inclined planes, five on each side of the mountain, which raised and lowered boats 1,172 feet on the west side and 1,400 feet on the east side, with fourteen miles of track between the vertical planes at the top of the mountain where the cars were pulled by horses or mules, and later by primitive steam locomotives.\(^3\) The 37-mile trip on the portage railroad took six hours to complete, a journey which delighted many, including Charles Dickens, who, during his 1842 crossing, wrote:

> “It was pretty traveling thus at a rapid pace along the heights of the mountains and with a keen wind, to look down into a valley full of light and softness catching glimpses through the treetops of scattered cabins; children running to the door; dogs bursting out to bark; terrified pigs scampering homeward; families sitting out in their gardens; cows gazing upward with stupid indifference; men in their shirt sleeves, looking on at their unfinished houses, planning out tomorrow’s work; and we riding onward high above them like a whirlwind.”

With the mountain subdued, the travel time from Philadelphia to Pittsburgh had been transformed from a 23-day bumpy ride in a wagon to four smooth days and nights on the canal. Even so, it did not prove to be enough, and the era of leisurely, bucolic travel on the canal would last a mere two decades.

RAILROADS TAKE OVER

Not that the canal wanted for business. It was said that on any given day or night one could count at least forty boats at any place along the canal, yet, year after year, the operation of the canal lost money, while at the same time the Pennsylvania Railroad proved to be a competitor that could satisfy the public’s unquenchable appetite.

\(^3\) This stretch included passage through a 900-foot tunnel, the first railroad tunnel built in America. for speed. With dwindling traffic on the canal, the commonwealth was hard-pressed to maintain it, and in 1854, when the “Pennsy” completed its all-rail link across the state, the state closed the Main Line. Three years later the “Grand Canal” in which the commonwealth had invested $16 million was sold to the railroad for about a third of that amount.

The Allegheny Portage Railroad was closed almost immediately, but the Pennsylvania Canal Company, a subsidiary of the Pennsylvania Railroad, continued to operate some divisions and branches of the canal in its diminished form. The Western Division discontinued service between Blairsville and Johnstown in 1863, and was fully abandoned in 1865. Across the state, a few isolated canal sections operated until the first decade of the twentieth century. The canal tunnel on the Conemaugh was sealed off in 1952 as part of a flood control project, and the foundation for the piers of the aqueduct remain the only signs of its existence.

THE CANAL LEGACY

While the canals were usually not a financial success for the state governments which built and operated them, they did stimulate the general economy. The Erie Canal proved the most prosperous as it lay in the only natural passage through the Appalachian wall, and had the advantage of having a head start of almost a decade ahead of the more complex, and hence costly, Pennsylvania Main Line, the only other system to go beyond the mountains.

By 1845, it was estimated that 4,000 boats operated on the Erie providing wages to 25,000 employees, exclusive of those who maintained the locks. The canal also spurred growth for two New York cities—Syracuse, which became the nation’s largest salt producer, and Rochester, whose eleven flour mills made it the world’s largest milling center. The economic boost fostered by the Pennsylvania Canal was, by comparison, more modest but still significant.

The canal systems were the first great public works projects in our history, a forerunner to the alphabet government agencies of the Great Depression of the 1930s: The Tennessee Valley Authority (TVA), the Civilian Conservation Corps (CCC), and the Works Progress Administration (WPA). These were followed in the 1950s by the Interstate Highway System, and in the 60s by NASA, the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

Public projects—which began with boats towed at a pace where passengers could exercise by getting off the boat to walk beside it—have brought us to a space station traveling at 17,150 miles per hour.

SOURCES

This 1839 drawing of the #6 engine house on the Allegheny Portage Railroad shows how canal boats were pulled up the dual tracks using a cable and pulley assembly. Trailing behind the car is a friction brake called a “safety buck.” If the car were to lose control and head downhill, the wheels would ride up on the ramp of the safety buck and the weight of the car would cause enough friction to slow it down. This simple safety device prevented many serious accidents.

intake, specialization of practice areas, and greater centralization of decision-making, far from shrinking services, is intended “to help as many people as we can.”

Of the future of Laurel Legal, Matt emphasized the necessity of a continued community presence and outreach, including through modern mediums such as social media, and referrals by attorneys believing those clients who cannot afford private counsel may meet the Laurel Legal income guidelines.

To this latter point, Matt adds that there are no income restrictions for plaintiffs in protection from abuse cases and that private counsel is often sought to assist in covering cases, for a fee, in this area.

Attorneys wishing to refer cases to Laurel Legal Services can direct their clients to call 724-836-2211, or toll-free at 800-253-9558.

Turberville, and Julia Moreman, for their assistance throughout this past year. Without that assistance, my job would have been impossible.

In conclusion—this time I really mean it—engage in legal debate and argument, challenge witnesses when that is appropriate, be prepared, present and argue your position with vigor and conviction, but do it with civility and respect for both your colleagues and the bench. It is my belief that if you follow those simple rules, you will not only be a good attorney, but one who is respected, successful, and undoubtedly derives more enjoyment from your work.

Thank you.

Possible Mentoring Program at the Westmoreland Bar

Did you know that Facebook’s Mark Zuckerberg was mentored by Steve Jobs? And that 93% of small/medium-sized businesses acknowledge that mentoring helped them to succeed? And that reverse mentoring is popular today with younger professionals providing much needed and greatly appreciated help with technology issues for more seasoned professionals?

With this in mind, the WBA is investigating if there is interest in a Lawyer-to-Lawyer Mentor Program. Look for an application and overview of the program in this issue of the sidebar or online at westbar.org.

For potential mentees, this is a great chance for you to connect with a mentor who can offer you insight, advice, and opportunity, helping you navigate the beginning stages of your law career in Westmoreland County. For potential mentors, this is a great chance to give back, share your experiences, and refine your own skills and networks. For both mentors and mentees, this is an opportunity to learn from each other and to continue the long-time practice of congeniality and civility in the Westmoreland Bar.

We are excited to see the mentorships and outcomes which evolve from this initiative, and look forward to matching you!

The purpose of this seminar is to provide innovative, practical and proven suicide prevention training. QPR stands for Question, Persuade, and Refer — the 3 simple steps anyone can learn to help save a life from suicide. Just as people trained in CPR and the Heimlich Maneuver help save thousands of lives each year, people trained in QPR learn how to recognize the warning signs of a suicide crisis and how to question, persuade, and refer someone to help.

Mentee/Mentor Program Application Packet

Purpose and Goals

The Mentor Program of the Westmoreland Bar Association has been developed to provide WBA members with five or less years in the practice of law (“mentees”) an opportunity to consult and develop relationships with more experienced lawyers (“mentors”). The purpose of the program is to introduce newer lawyers to the traditions and customs that are part of the practice of law in Westmoreland County. The program’s one-to-one mentoring relationship is designed to:

1. Maintain the standard of practice throughout Westmoreland County by assisting mentees with:
   - The day-to-day practice of law.
   - The working of the courts.
   - The economics of a law practice.
   - Relationships and networking with fellow lawyers.
   - Relationships with the judiciary.
   - Matters of general professional concern and competence.

2. Promote collegiality, civility and socialization between mentees and more experienced members.

3. Assist mentees in bridging the gap, especially with practical practice issues, including law practice management, Local Rules changes, and other general guidance.

4. Addressing participating attorneys “quality of practice life”.

5. Heighten and maintain participating attorneys’ technical competence.

Memorandum of Understanding

As an applicant to the Mentor Program, you understand the following:

1. The mentor is not agreeing to generate, provide or review work product for the mentee.

2. The mentor is not agreeing to manage the mentee’s practice, either directly or indirectly.

3. The mentor is not agreeing to have any contact with or responsibility for the mentee’s clients.

4. The mentor/mentee process is not a guarantee of future employment nor is it intended to form an employer-employer relationship of any kind.

   I, _____________________________, have read, fully understand, and agree to follow the above Memorandum of Understanding. I understand that requesting assistance contrary to the above Memorandum of Understanding may result in my immediate removal from the Mentor Program.

The Mentor Program is an important component in the Bar Association’s mission to maintain the honor and dignity of the profession of the law, cultivate social relations among its members, and increase its usefulness to members in promoting the due administration of justice.

Mentors & Mentor-Mentee Relationships

Mentors are requested to participate in the Mentor Program based on their years in practice, demonstrated integrity, commitment to professionalism, ability and desire to share experiences that can be beneficial to the mentees.

While we expect that many of the mentor-mentee relationships will last throughout the participant’s professional career, both mentors and mentees are asked to only make a one-year commitment to the program. There is no required time commitment during that year, but at least three regular, lunch meetings between a mentor and mentee will be scheduled, along with other possible events.
